With the exception of his father, perhaps no one expected the little Thomas Edison to be the man whose inventions were countless. As usual, his genius was taken by his teachers for madness. The child carried out his experiments which most often ended in a fire and a good beating from his father. In the end, he was deprived from his pocket money altogether.

One night his mother was suddenly taken ill. Because his father was absent, the child called a doctor who examined the lady and said that an immediate surgical operation might save her life. Because the light was dim, he would not be able to operate it and started to leave. The child grew mad and asked the doctor to wait. Edison quickly ran to the barber's shop nearby, broke into it and soon returned carrying a big mirror. Then in a hurry, he brought all the oil lamps he could find in the house and lit them in front of the mirror. Looking at the child in admiration, the doctor performed the operation and saved her life.

While carrying the mirror back Edison dropped it and it fell to pieces. The barber ran after him and beat him severely. By that time, his father had come back and he was told the whole story. Together they were very fast to see the barber who demanded fourteen dollars for the mirror. "well I am sorry, here is the money" said Edison's father. "And here are the beats you gave my son. Now I think it is settled. Later, Thomas Edison made successful and rapid progress in every scientific field.
