VI- Reading Comprehension & Summary Making (150 Marks)

Read the following passage then answer the questions below:

Lisa was an A student in high school, but after two years in college, she has changed her major four times already. She now suffers from sleeping and eating disorders. She believes she has no friends and doesn't know what to do.

What is happening to Lisa happens to millions of new college students each year. It is called student shock. Going to college has its ups and downs, but to some students the downs are more numerous and difficult for students to handle and so leave them in a complete shock.

There are reasons why new college students suffer at the beginning even more than the earlier generation. First is the weakening family support structure. The transition from high school to college has always been difficult, but in the past there was more family support to help students get through it. Today, with divorce rates and unstable families, the traditional family is no longer there to provide support and guidance. Some families even think that their part is over as soon as their children join a college.

Another major cause is the large selection of majors available. As a result, students switch majors a couple of times which costs them extra years to graduate. It becomes also depressing for such students that they have taken courses that don't count toward a degree and added to their tuition costs.

While there is no magic cure for student shock, colleges have started to recognize the problem and are starting a number of ways to help. Most colleges have upgraded their psychological counseling centers to handle the greater demand for services. In addition, many schools are improving their vocational counseling services by giving students information about possible majors and career choices. In some colleges, first-year students are required to attend major career workshops as part of the advising process. Sometimes, colleges train senior students to detect such problems and offer the needed help at the right time.

If you feel overwhelmed by your college experience, remember that you are not alone. Students of different backgrounds start college with much anxiety. Many have experienced it before you and colleges certainly want you to succeed. So don't feel reluctant to speak up and seek professional help to get through your study.
